My Autograph Book

As the years roll on in the march of time,
Each little thought and each little line
That's written now, in these years the best,
Shall be a part of my treasure chest.

So before you write, I think you ought To give your prose or poem a thought.
Make it happy—make it gay!
In later years of you I'll say,
"Here are my friends—I know them well,
Who have written here—in my memory dwell":

Dear Elsie,

May your path be strewn with roses. Bright and thornless to the end 'Til your soul in Heaven repases. As the wish of your loving friend. I have enjoyed having you in my classes.

PORTRAITS

By JAMES J. METCALFE

Time to Play

The golden sun has disappeared . . . Beyond another day . . . And all the world is changing clothes . . . To go from work to play . . . It is the time when lights go on . . . And people take their ease . . . And when they have the chance to do . . . Whatever they may please . . . Some hearts are disappointed now . . . And some are feeling light . . . And everything is upside down . . . Or perfectly all right . . . The shadows seem to nudge the stars . . . The moon looks down and smiles . . . And life is not concerned about . . . The weight of weary miles . . . There may be plans to formulate . . . And promises to keep . . . But more importantly it is . . . The time to play and sleep.

How. Elsie.

"A dead fish can float down stream.

But only a live one can jump the rapids and go up stream."

So, Elsie, keep on traveling until you can go like the big rainbow trout that go up the stream by your house, until some day
some lucky fisher man will catch you.

You will always mean much to all of us. You have been so sweet.

May success be yours.
